Few appellate specialists have ever examined a witness, much less litigated multiple trials and arbitrations. Robin Meadow did all of these things for over 20 years at a major commercial firm, while also handling all of the firm's appellate work. He joined GMSR when he decided to limit his practice to civil appeals.

Robin's trial court experience gives him a unique perspective on appellate work. He understands the demands and pressures trial lawyers face and the countless ways things can go wrong at trial. He's very much at home consulting with trial lawyers during trial and in the post-trial phase, helping them protect their appellate record so they're well positioned to preserve a victory or challenge a defeat.

Robin's practice at GMSR continues the substantive focus he developed in his earlier years—business disputes, real estate, partnerships, probate and entertainment. But, like most appellate lawyers, he's a generalist. At GMSR, he has also handled significant appeals involving healthcare, family law, personal injury and bankruptcy.

When he isn't practicing law, Robin enjoys spending time with his family, reading about history, and playing bass guitar.
