Jeffrey Raskin argued and won his first appellate case even before graduating from law school—a First Amendment case before the United States Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit. Since then, Jeff's career has focused on appellate law, including a clerkship with the Honorable Raymond C. Fisher of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

Reflecting his broad range of substantive legal experience, Jeff has been honored three times with the prestigious California Lawyer Attorney of The Year (CLAY) Award, in vastly different types of cases. He received his first CLAY Award for his California Supreme Court win that fundamentally altered the way that wills have been interpreted since King Henry VIII. He received his second CLAY Award for his win in a landmark and closely-watched California Supreme Court case that established critical principles regarding both arbitration law and attorney ethics. He received his most recent CLAY Award for his win in a California Supreme Court case that resolved key areas of dispute regarding the economic loss rule, which creates boundaries between tort and contract law. Through these cases and many more, Jeff has earned a reputation for thinking outside of the box and crafting unique appellate arguments in tough-to-win cases.

Jeff assists clients, their trial counsel and in-house counsel in a wide array of appellate matters, with an emphasis on business disputes and trusts and estate matters. Jeff also has extensive experience representing clients in arbitration-related matters, including appeals and working with trial lawyers regarding enforcement of arbitration agreements and the confirmation or vacatur of arbitration awards.
